

Divisions of Student Expectations

The student expectations can be divided into two groups: transferrable language learning how-to's, and language practice opportunities.

Strategies are called transferrable how-to's because they focus on how to listen, speak, read, write, and learn new vocabulary. They are also called transferrable how-to's because students can take them with them from class to class, content to content.